

The [139] CCO and many other Chief Officers make part of the [113] Governance team, which formulate rules and [116] Policies, based on the company's [117] Corporate Culture and moderated by its [118] Ethical Values.

From another point of view, the [139] CCO mandates and demands [130] Compliance from the company team, which is also important on [140] Risk Management. Consequently, when respecting all these good practices, the number of [142] Threats created by the disrespect of the rules are avoided. [142] Threats that could also be created by an aggressive or polarized [117] Corporate Culture of the Company.

All these practices are rewarded by [133] Certifications by outside and bigger Organizations.
